When the commandos choose the fittest, the fittest are expected to perform above the rest. When God chooses His priests, He does not choose the best, the most elite or the holiest. He chooses the weak and those who struggle like anyone else. Yet it is in these men that God challenges obedience, and trust that He can work through them. What makes the Church of God remarkable above other human institutions, which require talents and skills, is that God can build His Church even with the limitations of His priests.
